GREAT GAGE

After completing high school, the next big step for many learners is to progress their learning further by registering for university. While this can be very exciting for many people, it can also prove to be very frightening and confusing at the same time.

We all usually have a vague idea of which career we want to pursue in our lives but when it comes to narrowing it down and deciding on which university we want to attend, it can be a very difficult task that leaves many people worried about their futures.

As Great Gage, we have decided to design a website that can help alleviate a lot of the pressure and anxiety that is often tied to the journey of deciding where and what you want to study. The target audience for our website is people or students that are looking to further their studies at a tertiary level but can't quite decide on what it is they want to study yet.

The main goal of the website is to, in turn, help these previously discussed people or students gain a better understanding of what they want to work towards and allow them to view information about each available university in the country, along with each course that they will be able to study once they are accepted there.

Users will be able to access the website and navigate through the pages to view information about these universities and courses that are being offered along with them.
